THE EVACUATION OF SHANGHAI NEAR

DEFENDERS' LINES WEAKEN ENEMY GUN FIRE IS HEARD

In Soo Chow On the Grand Canal 57 Miles Northwest of the Capital of the Kiangsu Province—The Nationalist Army Is Forcing Its Liner Along Both Sides of Lake Taihu—Battle Ensuing Between the Cities of Pingwang and Wukiang on the Yantse Kiang River.

The Cantonese push northward, which is menacing the lines of communication of General Chang Tsung-Chang, Shantungese defender of Shanghai, was more pronounced Sunday.

The lull in military operations in Kiangsu Province was broken Sunday. The Cantonese, who are working their way forward along both lines of Lake Taihu, west of Shanghai, became involved in fighting on the shore of the lake between Pingwang and Wukiang. The sound of heavy gunfire could be heard in Soochow, on the Grand Canal 57 miles northwest of Shanghai.

Still another evidence of the Cantonese threat to the northeastern communications was given Saturday night. An armed band of 70 men removed several rails from a point on the Nanking-Shanghai railroad, only five miles from Shanghai.

A passenger train passing over the line was derailed but no one injured. General Chang Tsung-Chang's personal actions indicate that he is worried about his line of communications from Shanghai to his capital, Tsinaifu. He visited various points along the railroad to Tientsin and conferred with his generals in charge of guarding the line of communication.

The Cantonese or Nationalists, are continuing to advance down the Yangtze river toward Nanking, capital of Kiangsu Province and 200 miles west of Shanghai. They now are reported to be only 30 miles from Nanking, and remorse of its imminent fall have been circulated.

Missionary leaders seriously are considering withdrawing their workers from Nanking, in which city it is estimated there are 430 Americans.

Many Chinese refugees are arriving at Shanghai from Nanking and the neighboring city of Chinkiang.

The increasing threat to his communications is lending color to the reports circulated by Nationalist sympathizers that General Chang Tsung-Chang must evacuate Shanghai and withdraw northwestward to the Yangtze river, thereby admitting the impossibility of defending his long line of communications against the thrusts of the Nationalists.

Reports that several of General Chang Tsung-Chang's subordinate leaders may desert him also are circulated in Nationalist quarters.

Sunday's observance of the second anniversary of the death of Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, pioneer Chinese republican leaders did not bring the intense Nationalist drive to capture Shanghai which had been prophesied. The only fighting reported was in the region of Lake Taihu.

The most thoroly international spectacle since the Shanghai concentration was begun took place on the streets of the city Sunday when the Shanghai volunteer corps paraded, 1,700 strong.

The marchers included Americans, English, Scotch, Japanese, Italians, Portuguese, Filipinos, Chinese and Russians. The corps consists of resident foreigners in Shanghai and was organized to act in an emergency.

A feature of the parade was the presence of a recently recruited Russian company of 200 men, most of them veterans of the Czarist armies. It is believed that this company is the only mercenary body employed by any municipality in the world. It constitutes the only paid unit in the volunteer corps.

F. W. Linde, Soviet consul at Shanghai, returned from Nanking, after an unsuccessful attempt to release Mme. Borodin, wife of the Cantonese advisor and three Russian couriers, who were arrested by the Shantungese more than a week ago.

A state of virtual panic prevails among the Chinese shopkeepers of the native city of Shanghai, who are feeling the hand of the Shantung soldiery, whose tactics are believed to be doing much to swing native business men over to the Nationalist cause.

Chang Tsung-Chang's troops are said to be maintaining the evil reputation they have gained in other parts of the country. A dozen shops have been looted and many merchants are afraid to open their doors. Large sums of money are demanded at the point of the bayonet, while the native police are powerless to interfere.

"HOW ABOUT BUDGET?"

When Director General of the Budget Lord made a visit to the Smithsonian Institution he was greatly surprised when, breaking into a conversation General Lord was conducting, a voice asked: "How about the budget?" Turning quickly, General Lord discovered it was an Indian Myna, a talking bird in the Smithsonian collection. The story is vouched for by other officials who were present. This photograph shows O. D. Wayland, assistant bird keeper of the national zoo, with the bird.

NET INCOME OF SCIOTO VALLEY POWER COMPANY

Increase in Freight Revenue,
But Loss in Receipts For
Passenger Service.

Net income of the Scioto Valley Railway and Power Co., for the year ended December 31, was $63,190, an increase of $17,629 over the previous year. After payment of income tax and dividends on first preferred stock there was carried to surplus $25,918, an increase of $10,545 over the surplus indicated at the end of 1925.

Frank A. Davis, president of the company, says in a statement to stockholders:

"The increase in freight revenue was $15,020 and the increase in power revenue was $24,910. The loss in passenger revenue was $2790 as against $51,760 in 1925 and $64,903 in 1924. The relatively small loss in 1926 as compared with the two preceding years might be taken as an indication that the company has approached the low point in its passenger revenue."

TELLS OF EARLY LIFE ON PLAINS

Old Texas Ranger Helped Bury Victims of Comanche Indian Massacre

Tahoka, Texas.—"You're the bravest kid I ever saw," an officer in the Union army once told I. P. Metcalf, better known locally as "Uncle Ike."
"I'm not brave; I've just got too darned much pride to be a coward," the then youthful fighter quickly retorted.

It was probably that "pride" he spoke about while doing service in the Civil war that has marked "Uncle Ike" as a successful fighter, and "Uncle Ike," Civil war veteran, ex-Indian fighter and former member of the Texas Rangers, has led a quiet life as "marrying squire" of Tahoka for the last few years.

"Uncle Ike" Metcalf took his first step onto the fertile plains of Texas in 1868 as one of a detachment of Texas Rangers. Entering Lynn county, or what is now called Lynn county, from the southeast, the rangers marched northward to the Tahoka springs, on the west side of Tahoka lake, about nine miles northeast of the present town of Tahoka, where they pitched camp and spent ten days.

Tells of Trip to Plains.
Metcalf had been stationed at Camp Cooper, six miles above Fort Griffin on the Clear Fork branch of the Brazos, as a member of the Second Texas Rangers. The occasion of his first trip to the plains he says was this:
"Along in the summer of '68 about 60 negro soldiers, either of the Sixth or Tenth cavalry, I don't remember which, from Fort Concho, where San Angelo now stands, had been sent to the plains under the command of a Lieutenant Gilbert on the trail of a bunch of Indians who had been stealing horses from outlying ranches. As the days went by, fear for the safety of the negroes grew. No word was heard from them. Then, one day in August, orders were received at Camp Cooper for the 36 Texas Rangers stationed there to start a search for the negro troopers.

Settlements Near Forts.
"The only settlements in western Texas in those days were centered around Fort Griffin, Fort Concho, Del Norte, where El Paso now stands, and a few other such forts. Indians in Oklahoma were allowed to leave reservations and journey into the western part of Texas to hunt the buffalo that grazed the plains in herds of from a hundred to several thousand head.
Frequently these Indians, not content with killing buffalo alone, raided scattering and isolated ranches, waylaid travelers, and even at times ventured down into Comanche, Brown, Erath, and other central west Texas counties.

"It took a brave group of men to start a trip across the plains facing the probability of meeting up with hostile Indians, the scarcity of watering places and the danger of becoming lost and running out of food, to say nothing of the loneliness of such a trip.

All Eager to Go.
"But when the orders came the whole bunch was rearin' to go. Captain Brown of Erath county was to be in command. While we were getting ready to break camp and to start the trip that was to cover hundreds of miles that would take weeks to make, a mail carrier of the Dallas-Weatherford-Fort Griffin-Fort Davis-Fort Adobe Del Norte line rode in and told us of a terrible massacre of a bunch of California immigrants committed by a band of Comanche Indians, that had taken place near the head of Devil's river, between the present town of Odessa and Concho.

"As this would not be much out of our way we decided to go by way of the scene. We arrived at the head of the river some time later, which was known as Devil's Creek springs, and found that the immigrants had apparently camped there several days. Six miles northwest of there we found the most hideous sight I ever saw. Thirty-six people had been slaughtered, stripped of their clothing, and cut to pieces. Not one white man lived to tell the story of how it all occurred, but the story was silently told in the scene we saw.

Mark of Comanches' Work.
"We knew the Comanches had done the work, as the Comanches and Tonkawas were the only Indians that roamed in west Texas at that time. I never knew of a Tonkawa tribe harming white people, but the Comanches were always into mischief.
"The Indians probably found the immigrants camped at the springs and waited for a good chance to attack them. When the latter got out from under cover and on the plains the Indians sped down on them unawares and wiped out the entire group.

"Nothing was left undone. They murdered and undressed their victims, took their valuables, cut their throats and stomachs open, scalped them, and left their bodies on the open prairies. The wagons were burned where they stood, and their positions showed that little fight had been made, for if they had the wagons would have been corralled. Ashes, the dead bodies of 36 men, women and children, three dead mules, and one dead horse, and a few scattering feathers from mattresses, were all we found. The number of hoof prints showed that the tribe of Indians had been a large one.

"The story of the burial of the dead is almost too awful to tell. We arrived probably ten days after the massacre had taken place. Graves were dug by the sides of the dead about two and one-half feet deep. One man would do the digging while another would hold up a shovel of burning tar near him to kill the odor. When one man got tired digging he exchanged places with the tar burner. It took us two days to bury them."

With this gruesome task accomplished, the rangers doubled back to Big Spring, near which were the Kilpatrick and Coffee ranches, the nearest outposts to the plains country. From there they journeyed to Wet Tobacco creek, which runs through Borden county, then to Moore's Draw, 20 miles southeast of the present town of Tahoka, and then to Tahoka lake.

Never Heard of Lost Negroes.
"We stayed at Tahoka lake for about ten days," Uncle Ike says, "waiting and watching for the lost negroes, but never saw or heard of them. We got tired staying there and moved to the Yellow Horse canyon and then to the Blanco canyon. While going down the Blanco we met up with a bunch of Comanches and had a little skirmish. One or two of our men were wounded and we killed 12 or 13 Indians, I don't remember which. From there we returned to our old camp.

"Were we glad to get back? Man, civilization looked good to us."
But, "Uncle Ike" Metcalf had received the thrill that accompanies one in coming on the great, stretching plains of western Texas, and as civilization moved westward he settled in Lynn county and took up the more peaceful position of "marrying squire." Since then he has married more couples than any other one man living in the plains or Panhandle country.

Kill Guinea Pigs in Lethal Gas Chamber

Portland, Ore.—Hydrocyanic lethal gas that is being used to execute murderers in the state of Nevada, claimed the lives of two guinea pigs and two rabbits in tests which the Portland fire bureau is conducting to determine the exact nature of the effects by hydrocyanic gas poisoning.

The little animals came to their death in such a quick and painless manner as would tend to support the contentions of Nevada authorities that death by lethal gas is the most humane method known of killing a living creature, a group of firemen and medical students decided after they had seen the pigs and rabbits placed in a vault filled with the invisible, tasteless and practically odorless gas.

Two breaths of the lethal gas are said to be sufficient instantly to kill a man.

The two guinea pigs were the first to die. No change in the actions of the animals was noticed for two or three minutes, the gas having failed to dispel the fresh air in the room. Presently, however, a slight twitching of their bodies was noticed, followed by a short period of pronounced gasping. In another moment they had fallen over, with involuntary muscular twitching their only actions.

Mountain Lion Slain After Raid on Sheep

Mayhill, N. M.—George Russell, United States forest ranger, went to the aid of a sheep herder upon his ranch near here the other day and killed a mountain lion which had been slaughtering sheep on a wholesale scale.

One night a small band of Mr. Russell's sheep was left on the range and the next morning 16 of them were found dead, bitten through the neck by a wild animal.

A few nights later a herd of 195 goats with about 100 kids were left on the range and the result was 11 grown goats and 48 young kids were killed, their bodies lying along the hill for a distance of 200 yards or more, and not a carcass had been touched save for the attack on the throat.

Within a short time the Mexican sheep herder discovered that it was a mountain lion killing the sheep. The animal was so bold that the cries of the herder did not drive him away. Mr. Russell says he joined forces with the herder and on the third night the lion was killed, and no further losses were experienced.

Wisconsin City Attorney Bags 63 Crows in Hunt

Burlington, Wis.—Frank Ruzicka, city attorney, claims the title of champion crow hunter hereabouts. He recently made a record bag of 63 birds in one morning. Four tame crows, eating noisily and merrily while Ruzicka hides behind a blind, are the basis of his success. He is a favorite with Italian county farmers and receives many requests from them to come and hunt on their farms. Racine county has no bounty on crows and the pests are numerous in the vicinity.

Well, There's Nothing Like Being Generous

Youngstown, Ohio.—George Seber, a farmer near here, went to his barn and found his cow proudly guarding a wobbly calf. As he looked at the newcomer, another stepped to its side.
Seber called his children to see the twins and left. A cry from the children brought him back to see a third calf, that had been hidden in the straw. Then he investigated and found a fourth asleep in a corner of the stall.

FIRST YOUTH TO WIN A. A. A. MEDAL

Raymond Clark, ten, of Washington, is the first schoolboy traffic policeman to win a medal from the American Automobile association for exceptional service. He saved the life of Betty Griffith, seven (left), by pushing her out of the way of a speeding motor car which had failed to obey signals.

General Attitude Appears to Be Prevailing Good-Natured Civility.

Courtesy of the road is fairly well observed by drivers of motor vehicles in general.

Occasionally one motorist may meet with discourtesy and an exhibition of boorish manners from another driver, and of course the "road hog" is ever with us. This, however, appears to be the exception.

Courtesy and a prevailing good-natured civility appear to be the general attitude of motorists toward each other.
But are we as motorists observing the same courtesy and thoughtful consideration toward the man and woman who walks that we observe toward each other?

Help Pedestrians.
Are we trying to make the way of the pedestrian less difficult in crossing less busy thoroughfares and congested city streets?

Of course it is taken for granted that every right-minded driver of a motor vehicle is trying to observe the laws governing traffic regulation and to avoid accidents in every way possible. This he is bound to do, not only out of regard for the laws of the land, and the protection of his fellow citizens, but as a self-protective measure as well.

But are we as careful in the lesser things as we might be?

Many motorists are in the habit of rounding corners at a fast rate of speed. In doing this they may be obeying the law if the traffic signals are set for them to go forward. But surely good breeding and courtesy require that they drive a little more slowly in order to allow the pedestrians who are crossing the street at the signal of the traffic officer an opportunity to get across without any mishap.

Unnecessary Honking.

Again, in the matter of blowing horns unnecessarily, the motorist often shows a lack of consideration toward those who are walking. How often we notice a driver noisily approach a person on foot and then suddenly emit a hoarse "honk," causing that person to jump nervously. This, in itself, is a small matter, but in the case of an old person it is very confusing, and might even lead to disastrous results in the case of a man or woman suffering from a heart or nervous disorder.

When stopping at boulevards a motorist may greatly assist a pedestrian by making his intentions plain and signaling the person crossing the streets whether to stop or proceed.

Solve Vexed Problem of Glaring Car Headlights

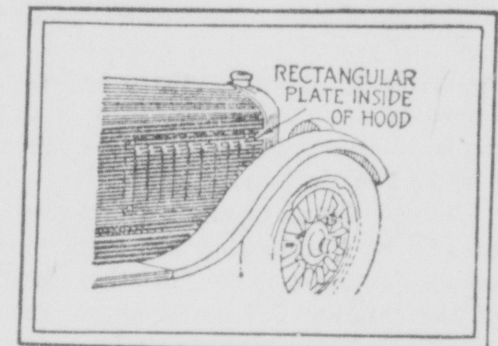

A novel solution of the vexed problem of nonglaring headlamp illumination was described on June 2 at the summer meeting of the Society of Automotive Engineers by K. D. Chambers, scientific research engineer, in an address on complimentary color headlighting.

Briefly, the proposed system consists in the use of oval headlamps each of which has two paraboloid reflectors, the upper one fitted with an orange-colored glass and the lower one with blue glass, and of a color filter box just inside the windshield of the automobile in which are a sheet of plain transparent glass that filters out the orange rays and another that filters out the blue rays. These filters are connected electrically with the bulbs in the lamps so that when the orange filter is drawn down into the line of vision of the driver the blue light is turned off and the orange light turned on automatically, and when the blue filter is drawn down the orange light is shut off and the blue light turned on.

Each viewing filter is transparent to light of the same color and so the driver can see practically the same as if he were driving with white light.

Radiator Cover Useful in Keeping Motor Warm

A radiator cover of the conventional type serves to regulate the amount of air that flows through the radiator while the car is in motion, but it cannot keep the motor warm for very long when the car is standing, owing to loss of heat through the openings in the side of the hood which permit the air to circulate freely. Metal or plywood plates bolted on the inside of the hood as shown in the illustration will stop this waste and also help to keep your feet warm by driving the heated air back through the openings in the floor boards.—Popular Science Monthly.

Persons Who Drive Take Good Care of Themselves

Persons who drive automobiles take better care of themselves while walking than do those who do not drive cars, according to recent research work looking into the causes of traffic accidents.

It is said that few motor-car drivers are caught off their guard when walking. The records show that the majority of accidents to pedestrians involve persons who have had no experience in handling cars.

The reasons for this are that in motoring the driver gets a perfect picture of what he faces as a pedestrian, and when he walks he conducts himself accordingly. He walks in a confident manner, and when he crosses the streets at intersections he makes allowances for the inability of the traffic officers to look out for everyone. He knows the approximate distance in which a car can stop. He is able to observe whether the drivers are keeping their eyes on the road or not. He is trained to take no chances and watch signals, so that from his general experience as a driver he is trained automatically as a pedestrian.

It would appear that the moral from this is that every person should learn to drive a car at the earliest possible moment.

AUTOMOBILE ITEMS

Keep battery filled with distilled water.

See that springs are greased occasionally.

See that the radiator is kept filled with water.

A nice time for a pedestrian to cross a street is about three or four o'clock in the morning.

If the engine does not start promptly when starter is pressed, get out and discover the cause.

See that the front wheels toe in five-sixteenths of an inch at front. Wheels should be checked occasionally for alignment to avoid tire wear.

The new trend in automobile trucks, according to displays at the New York show, is toward lightness and speed. Anything so they don't make them wider.

A runaway horse that stopped when a red light was turned against him, as was reported, demonstrates again that horse sense is greater in many instances than driver sense.

The auto coming from the right has the right of way at an intersection, but it is well to remember that a locomotive has the right of way, whether coming from the right or left.

METROPOLITAN PRIMA DONNA CONCERT TOUR

In Memorial Hall, Columbus, Tuesday Evening—Large Audience Expected.

Madame Maria Jeritza, world famous prima donna dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera company has prepared one of the most elaborate concert programs ever to have been presented in central Ohio for her gala concert in Columbus, next Tuesday evening, March 15, at Memorial hall. The sensational diva, now on the triumphal progress of her annual concert tour upon completion of her season at the Metropolitan, will sing not less than four operatic arias, a group of German lieder songs, and those in French, Italian and English, as well. Maxmilian Rose, distinguished violinist, will be heard in several groups of violin solos, as well. Mme. Jeritza's arias will include those from "Turandot," "La Forza del Destino," "Jeanne d'arc," "Tosca" and possibly "The Dead City."

This season, she has risen to the loftiest flights of her spectacular career. Her appearances at the Metropolitan opera house have been a series of glorious sensations. In concert, capacity audiences have greeted her everywhere! Last Sunday in Boston, her concert program was prolonged several hours, due to the insatiable demands of a frenzied audience, and this experience was repeated in Washington D. C., where a most distinguished assemblage acclaimed her later in the week. Her Chicago recital scheduled for Sunday has been sold out long in advance, and it is predicted that her Columbus concert, next Tuesday, will mark the climax of the Capital City's season. Delegations will attend from practically every town and village within a radius of 100 miles of Columbus, and it speaks well for the musical taste of Columbus that it will be generously represented.

Shortly after her Columbus concert, Mme. Jeritza will sail for London, to open the annual spring season at the great Covent Garden opera, where, last year, she created a furore that extended to Buckingham palace, resulting in "command appearances" before their majesties, King George and Queen Mary. From London, the dazzling singer will go to Vienna, to sing at the Imperial Hofoper opera, where she has appeared each season since her original discovery by the late Emperor of Austria Franz-Josef. She will spend the summer with Baron Leopold von Popper, her husband, at their magnificent villa on the outskirts of Vienna.

Tickets, priced from $1.10 to $3.30 are available in Columbus, at Heaton's music store, 33 East Long street, where mail orders may be addressed to Joseph O'Leary, manager of the concert.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

The March meeting of the Presbyterian Missionary Society was held yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. G. H. Colvill with Mrs. Colvill and Mrs. B. T. Hedges as hostesses. Installation of officers for the coming year was held with Miss Clara Southward, the retiring president as the installing officer. Miss Southward having served in the capacity of president for the past three years, was given a vote of thanks for her untiring efforts which produced very effective results. Miss Carrie Marion was in charge of the devotionals and Mrs. Isaiah Ravenaugh, vice president and Mrs. O. C. Barr, president of the Amanda Missionary society, were guests and gave short addresses. The officers installed were, Mrs. Clark K. Hunsicker, president; Mrs. George Bentley, vice president; Mrs. Will Mack, secretary; Miss Grace Moodie, treasurer; Mrs. W. F. Cellar, secretary for literature; Mrs. James Dresbach, secretary for associate members.

The 73rd birthday anniversary of Mr. T. J. Morris was fittingly celebrated last evening at his home, 722 North Court street when friends and relatives gathered there. The affair was planned as a surprise for Mr. Morris and at 6 o'clock a delicious supper was served to these guests: Mrs. Ella Stein, daughter Miss Ethel and son Clarence Stein, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Campbell Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Morris, son Ralph, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Evans, children, Helen Lucille and Emmett Morris, Mrs. Mary G. Morris and daughter Betty Jane, Mr. and Mrs. John Bell, Mr. and Mrs. Felix Caldwell, Mrs. Kate Stein, of this city; Miss Helen Morris of Cleveland; Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Blacker, of Chillicothe; Mrs. M. E. Washburn and son Ben Morris, of Columbus; Mr. and Mrs. William Fisher, of South Bloomfield, Ohio.

 "In the bright lexicon of youth," quoted the visitor, "there is no such word as fail."

Faulty cream separators are the means of dairy farmers throwing away thousands of dollars every day, declares the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. A summary of the reports made by over 700 cow testing associations throughout the United States shows that the losses due to inefficient skimming are tremendous, even on the individual farms.

A good separator in good working order should leave only a trace of butterfat in the skim milk, not over 1/100 of one percent. A machine in poor condition will often leave as much as one percent of butterfat in the skim milk, or about one-fourth of all the butterfat contained in the original milk. With a herd producing an average of 30 gallons of milk a day, a loss of 1/100 of one percent of butterfat in the skim milk is negligible. In one year's time the amount of butterfat lost would be about 5.58 pounds, which at 40 cents a pound is worth $2.23.

Where one percent of the butterfat is lost in the skim milk, the loss at the end of the year amounts to 558.4 pounds, which has a value of $223.56. This easily accounts for the loss of over $220 in a year on a single farm may often be the deciding factor between a profit and a loss in the cow milking business. If saved, it would mean the purchase price of a new separator about every six months.

The checking of serious separator losses by testers of cow testing associations is one of the ways these associations save the farmer money. A test of the skim milk for butterfat quickly reveals whether or not the separator is doing its job well.

Cat Warns Mistress of Robbers in Home

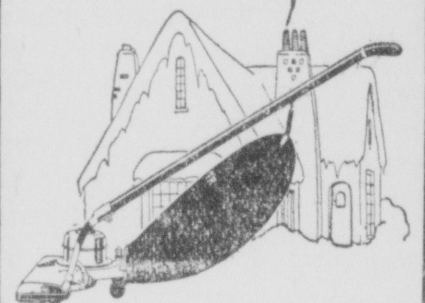

Oconto, Wis.—That a cat may guard a home from thieves as well as from mice, was proven here recently when "Pat," a 20-pound feline, frustrated the attempts of two robbers in the home of his mistress, Mrs. Helen McClelland.

The cat, startled by the entrance of the men, rushed to the bedroom where Mrs. McClelland slept and awakened her by jumping on the bed. She investigated the cause of the feline's agitation and heard the intruders making their escape.

TWO GOOD STORIES

RELATED OF H. R. H.

In illustration of the prince of Wales' readiness in an emergency, Major Verney, in his recent character study of his royal highness, tells of an impressive full-dress show when the chief event was the presentation of an order to a senior administrative official. The staff officer responsible found that he had forgotten or mislaid the decoration. Completely demoralized, he staggered to the prince: "I had it in my pocket in a small box. The box is there all right, but God knows where the decoration is." The personal staff standing at the prince's rear were appalled by this contretemps, and quite nonplussed. "Give him the box," said his royal highness coolly; "that will do to go on with," and the function was completed without a hitch. Ready wit is also one of the prince's gifts. While in the United States he was told, at a dance, that his partner on several occasions was an assistant in a drug store. Major Verney says the prince smiled cheerfully, remarked, "It must be a jolly good drug store," and danced one more dance with the girl.

Jim Blakeham's Clothes

By ROSE MEREDITH

(Copyright.)

JIM BLAKEHAM, the most important of all the cowboys at Red Gulf ranch, was getting ready for the dance at the Gulf schoolhouse.

"You look like a blue-eyed baby," offered Frank Perks.

"I am," retorted Jim shortly.

"How about the new school teacher—we can't all dance with her?"

"Why try it, then?" was Jim's reply.

"If you'd stay home once—only once, and give some of us other fellows a chance," complained another young man mournfully.

"Try to keep me home," suggested Jim gaily. And it was that remark that started the thing. One by one his companions left the table and hurried to the bunkhouse.

By the time Jim Blakeham reached his own room, the bunkhouse was empty and his companions were riding off the range, in one swift moving body.

"Wonder what the hurry is," muttered Jim, pulling off his clothes, and five minutes later, after a careful search of the place, he understood.

His best clothes had completely disappeared. If he went to the dance at the schoolhouse, it would have to be in a suit of working clothes.

Jim Blakeham was not angry—he knew it was a mischievous trick they had played upon him. But they couldn't keep him home that way—he cared too much about the new school teacher for she bore the same name as a girl he used to know—Millie Gray. If this was his Millie Gray, perhaps he could discover from her own lips why she had never answered the important letter he had written to her.

If this was his Millie Gray, she wouldn't care about his clothes. He got into them, glad that they were clean and that he had a new black tie. When he was finished, from somewhere to polished brown boots, anyone would have had to admit that Jim was good looking.

All the windows in the schoolhouse were wide open when Jim arrived. Outside, in the moonlight, many couples strolled under the cottonwoods, so that when Jim bent his head to enter the schoolhouse door, his appearance was an event. The voices of his friends greeted him, and some one started a little applause. Jim bowed gracefully, and the whole thing was getting along splendidly, when some one exclaimed:

"Look at the school ma'm—she's fainting!"

Jim Blakeham saw big Dick Forest awkwardly supporting a very small figure—there was a cloud of rich red hair tumbling over her shoulder.

"It's Millie—my Millie!" thought Jim as he pushed his way forward, but by the time he reached Dick Forest, the girl had been borne away by ministering women.

"That spoils your dance with the school teacher," taunted Dick Forest. "Believe me, boy, she is some dancer, too."

The next morning all the men went rushing off to a long day's riding, quite forgetting about the new school teacher. Jim Blakeham himself was the only one who actually had her on his mind that morning as he rode toward Red Gulf post office. He had made up his mind that if Millie Gray appeared cold and indifferent, he would not be the one to try to arouse her interest.

Dreaming thus as his white pony ambled along the trail, Jim suddenly heard a horse's hoofs, and then, turning, saw the girl of his heart riding closely behind him. She did not glance up at his face at first. It was only when he whirled his pony out of the trail and gave her a free passage that she looked up gratefully.

"Oh, thank you—I was just a bit afraid of an Indian I met yonder—why, Jim—Jim Blakeham! Is it really you?" She was radiant with delight, and Jim rode up to her, hat in hand.

"I didn't believe you'd remember me, Millie," he said, contentedly.

"Remember you? How ridiculous!" She blushed warmly, but her blue eyes were dancing with pure delight. "Just imagine, seeing you here!"

"Imagine meeting the only girl I ever loved out here in my loneliness," muttered Jim in a low, tense tone.

For a moment the girl stared at him unbelievably. "Oh, Jim Blakeham, do you really mean that?" she whispered softly.

"Ah, Millie Gray, Millie Gray, my heart has ached for you ever since I left Leadenville—I mailed you a letter, and you never answered it, and so, I just pulled stakes and came out here—is it true—that you care?" He was holding her hands now, and his hungry eyes asked questions.

Millie hung her head. Presently she nodded gently, and added so that only his ear heard in that vast prairie, "Would I be here today, Jim, if I did not? Last spring I read in the paper something about you and the ranch here—and that night I applied for the office of school teacher! I never received your letter—and my heart was broken—"

"Surely it is quite all right now, sweetheart?" asked Jim as he took her into his arms.

Helped Some

"Did you convince that man you were arguing with?"

"Not so far as I could see."

"What good did your talk do, then?"

"Well, it made me all the more certain I'm right."

LAST SAD RITESEdward Tiffin Tootle Laid to Rest in Brown Chapel
Cemetery Sunday.

A large concourse of friends and neighbors Sunday afternoon attended the last sad rites for Edward Tiffin Tootle at his beautiful country home in Wayne township.

Had Mr. Tootle lived until the tenth day of next June, he would have been eighty-five years of age, more than half a century of which was spent on the Wayne township farm, and the great number of people, who knew him best, and who had met, despite the threatening weather, to pay their last tribute of love and respect to his memory, was an eloquent testimonial to the sterling worth of this exemplary citizen and of their sorrow at his passing.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. E. D. Paulin, of Tiffin, a former pastor, assisted by Rev. E. A. Tovey, pastor of the Calvary Evangelical church, of this city.

A quartet from Chillicothe sang: "How Firm a Foundation," "Over There" and "Rock of Ages."

The ritualistic services were in charge of Scioto commandery, Knights Templar, of this city, of which he had been a member for so many years. He was made a Mason in Frankfort lodge 58 years ago and until the close of his busy life had a lively interest in the work and was most faithful in his attendance until his failing health forbade his going.

All that was mortal of Edward Tiffin Tootle was tenderly laid to rest on the family lot in the beautiful cemetery at Brown's Chapel, beside his wife, who preceded him in death forty four years ago. A rich profusion of flowers, tributes of loving friends, surrounded the casket and relieved the cheerlessness of the grave and inspired faith in the belief that beyond the grave we shall abide in grand consciousness of life.

MARIA JERITZA

Tomorrow evening at 8:30, Maria Jeritza, world famous prima donna dramatic soprano of New York's Metropolitan Opera company, sings at Memorial hall in Columbus, and one of the largest delegations ever to attend a Columbus concert from this city will be seen at this brilliant affair. Madame Jeritza reached Columbus this morning, accompanied by her husband, Baron Leopold von Popper, of Vienna, Austria, her manager, Mr. F. C. Coppicus, of New York, Mr. Maximilian Rono, distinguished violinist, and Mr. Emil Polak, Hungarian pianist (her assisting artists for the occasion), and three maids. Her concert tomorrow evening will be heard by a vast and distinguished audiences.

Tickets may be secured at Heaton's music store, in Columbus, located at 33 East Long street. Prices range from $1.10 to $3.30.

Deserved Tribute Paid

to Famous Race Horse

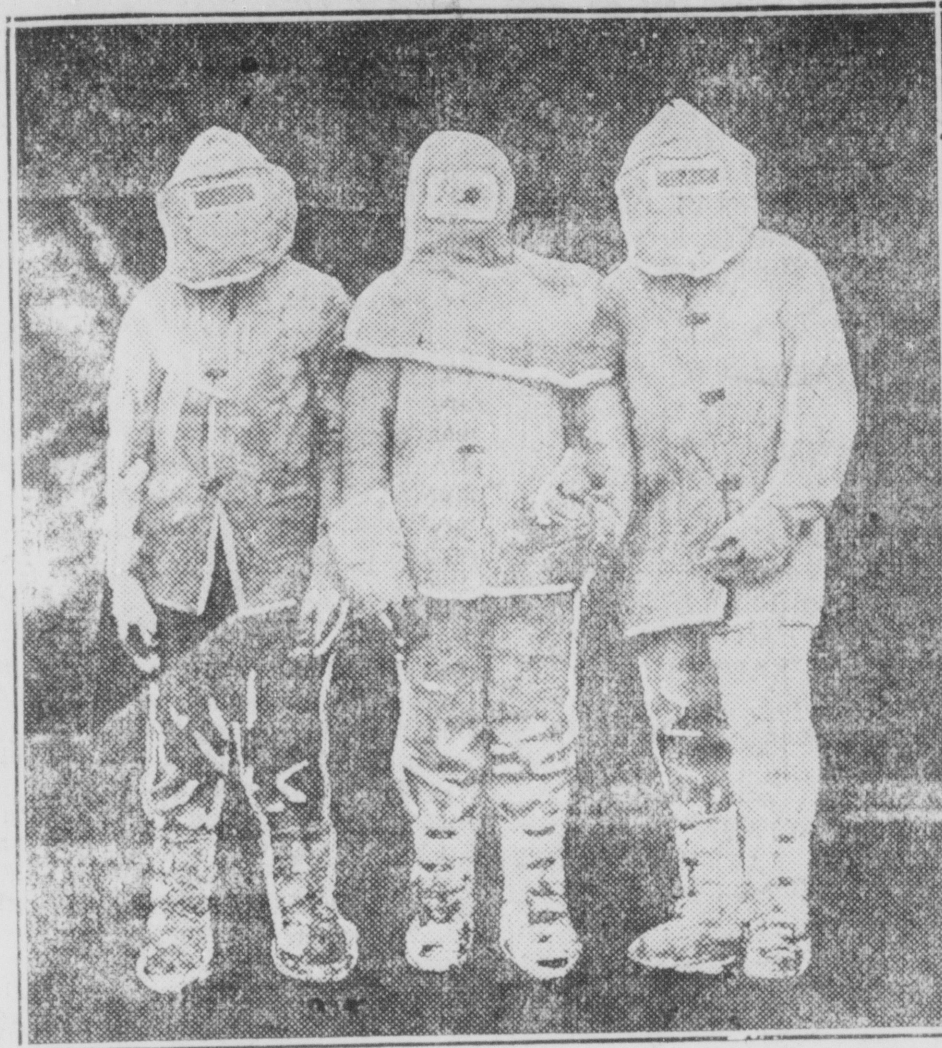

A tablet marking the grave of Goldsmith Maid, queen of American trotters, who set a record of 2:14 for the mile at Boston in 1874 and died in 1885, was unveiled at Trenton, N. J. in the presence of Gov. A. Harry Moore and a distinguished gathering of women and men prominent in sport and society. The famous trotter is buried on a farm adjoining the Trenton Fair grounds.

"We are here today to pay tribute to the horse," said Governor Moore. "Just a horse, and yet it gave the best that was in it. And that is a lesson for all human beings."

The tablet was given by a Trenton sportsman. Goldsmith Maid was owned by Henry M. Smith, a banker, and earned $364,200 for him in a reign of seven years on the American tracks.

VIOLIN AND SAX LEAD IN VOTING

Music is more than a means of self-expression to thousands of men in college today. It spells bread and butter to many of them and an occasional spread of jam for a great many more. When it comes down to selecting the instrument that is going to do all this for him, the majority of the votes are cast in favor of the violin, college professors and musical directors told the Conn Music Center recently in its investigation of the situation. Thirty-one per cent of musician-students select this instrument, these authorities say.

Although centuries behind the violin in point of time, the newest instrument of them all, the saxophone, runs a close second as the choice of thirty per cent of such students, due to its enormous popularity for dancing, vaudeville, motion pictures and for solos. The piano is elected to third place with 21 per cent; the cornet and organ are chosen by six and three per cent respectively. The remaining seven per cent is scattered over half a dozen string and wind instruments which have a necessary but less prominent place in the band and orchestra.

The financial benefits of being able to play an instrument, the Music Center points out, are not confined to the money earned while in college or to the student at all or even to the professional. The value of industrial bands is being recognized to a point where one applicant for a position receives preference over another if he can play, especially as a soloist, in the organization band.

London's False Teeth

Most persons have the idea from his books that Jack London was a huge, roistering fellow, prime of health and ready of fist. He was, alas, a shorty, and Frank O'Connell, a New York newspaper man, who was on many bouts of other than fist kind with London and who lived with him for a considerable period, relates that Jack had a set of false teeth which he carefully put on a chair beside his bed every night.—McNaught's Monthly.

Versailles in Danger
 The palace of Versailles, one of the greatest historic treasures of France, is threatened with destruction by the ravages of a small kind of toadstool, which is eating away the woodwork. Since 1922 the palace has been under observation, and it has been found that practically the whole of the woodwork is being turned into a powdery dust. Repairs begun in 1925 have cost $500,000, and much more will have to be spent to save the rest of the building from destruction.

NATIONAL CHAPLAIN IN EIGHT BATTLES

The American Legion has a man of rare courage for national chaplain this year. He is Rev. L. N. Wolfe, rector of St. Barbara's Roman Catholic church, Philadelphia, who served actually on the front line during eight battles in the World war and was cited for extraordinary gallantry by General Pershing. He was days at a time under fire administering the rites of his church to the soldiers, encouraging them, aiding with the wounded and burying the dead.

The national chaplain was with the Twenty-eighth division, in various infantry regiments and the One Hundred and Eighth machine gun battalion. He earned the title of "Philadelphia's Fighting Chaplain" with the One Hundred and Ninth Infantry.

His family served their country in the hour of need whenever called upon. His father had two enlistments in the Civil war, his older brother served in the Spanish-American war, and Rev. Mr. Wolfe kept up the good work by doing his bit in the World war.

Three days before the United States declared war, he applied for authority to organize a Red Cross Auxiliary unit in his locality, and he conducted successfully branch No. 18 until he himself, departed for the front. This branch continued to do excellent work throughout the war.

He helped organize a new Pennsylvania National Guard after the war and is now chaplain of the One Hundred and Third engineers, has been chaplain of his own Legion post, the Walter M. Gearty No. 315, continuously for seven years and has been chaplain of the Pennsylvania department, besides serving on the speaker's committee during the period of organization of the Legion in Philadelphia, and being active in all Legion affairs throughout the state. He was the first chaplain of the "40 and 8" and has attended most of the Pennsylvania and national conventions of the Legion.

The national chaplain gave the invocation at the launching of the U. S. S. "The American Legion." The invocation has been printed and framed. It now hangs in the cabin of the ship.

He was a member of the ritual committee at Minneapolis which laid the foundation for the present Legion ceremonial, and he retired from the field as candidate for national chaplain at the Minneapolis convention because Pennsylvania had a candidate for national commander at that time. He is a man of prudent judgment, stands high in the estimation of all who know him, both in military and civilian life. He has a working knowledge of French.

In Philadelphia January 30, 1,100 prominent citizens attended a banquet in honor of the national chaplain, the many speakers paying tribute to his high courage and devotion to duty.

Legion of Connecticut Plans 100-Acre Forest

The American Legion of Connecticut is planning to create a Legion state forest by the purchase of 100 acres for the purpose on the west side of the west branch of Farmington river, opposite People's forest, now owned by the state, according to an announcement made at Bristol, Conn., by Paige Seaton, chairman of the Legion's forestry committee. The "Forty and Eight," the honor and fun-making organization of the Legion, will build a camp in the forest.

Accommodating

GOOD SERMONS PREACHED BY EVANGELIST

Meetings at the Evangelical Church Grow in Interest—Services All This Week.

The subject of Miss Edna Banning's sermon at the Evangelical church Sunday night was; "Be Sure Your Sin Will Find You Out."

The subject of sin is not a subject people like to listen to. If they are saved they would rather talk about Jesus but if they are sinners they do not like to hear it.

God likes heart to heart talks on sin. There is no such thing as a good lie. Sin is vile, sin is disgusting. There is no pretty word to describe sin. Be sure your sin will find you out.

Sin is contagious, sin is vile and rude. So the race comes into the world tainted with sin. We sin because we are born of sin. The only way to keep your sins from finding you out is to get every smiggen of sin under the blood.

Sin finds men and women at the bar of human law. A good many laws today are taken from the ten commandments. If you are sinning you are sinning against the law of God and are sinning against your brother. All liars shall have their place in hell. Have everything covered by the blood and they will not trouble you any more.

Sin finds you out if never before, it will find you out at the judgment bar. There is a great day coming. Are you ready for that great day? God has His record book and it will be opened and you will see what God thinks you are. In the judgment day you cannot run, you will have to stand and see your sin. At judgment day, the curtain will be pulled aside and you will see your sins. All God knows about you will be read before the assembled host. Everything hid away will be seen if not under the blood. At the judgment day, the eye of sin will look at you and say that you committed me and you will scream.

A large attendance listened to the sermon and some found their way to the altar of prayer.

YOUNG LIFE ENDS

Herbert Moyer Stump Passed Away at Home of Parents—Burial at Stoutsville.

Herbert Moyer Stump, son of Ira and Mrs. Lucy Moyer Stump, was born April 12, 1914, at the home farm in Fairfield county, near Tarlton, and died Tuesday, March 8, 1927, at five o'clock.

He was consecrated to the Lord in baptism in infancy. He attended the centralized school at Stoutsville, where for two years he made a perfect record in attendance. Herbert united with the Presbyterian church at Tarlton February 9, 1919, under the pastorate of Rev. A. C. Walters.

Industrious in his habits, for one so young, he was also most thoughtful of others in the home. He was an interested member of the Boys' Four-H. Pig club. For the past eight months he had been in failing health, but thru it all he maintained his hope and courage, constantly making plans for the future. He will be greatly missed both in the home and in the group of young people, his associates, who held him as a friend.

The parents did not spare themselves in their efforts to restore his health, nor in loving ministry of devotion.

They with the members of the household, take this opportunity to again thank their friends and neighbors for the many expressions of sympathy and for the kindness shown.

The funeral services were held from the Presbyterian church in Tarlton Friday forenoon at 10 o'clock, conducted by Rev. E. S. Toensmeier. Burial in Maple Hill cemetery at Stoutsville.

Ground Hog Fast

North America has several species of marmots, but the common eastern woodchuck is known to everyone as the ground hog, says Nature Magazine. Woodchucks do not store up food, but eat heavily during the early fall and become excessively fat. In October or November they retire to their dens for a long hibernating sleep which lasts until spring. Length about twenty-three inches, weight eight pounds.

AMUSEMENTS

Based on that lilting melody written twenty years ago by Maude Nugent, Columbia Pictures Corporation has produced a film under the original title, "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," with the petite Shirley Mason in the original role.

The picture comes to the Met theater Monday for two days.

The wistful story of Rosie O'Grady the Second avenue foundling (was immortalized in the song, along with the unforgettable Ben Shapiro, the kindly old pawnbroker and patrolman Jimmy Brady, who lavished their lives upon the waif who was left on a doorstep.

A. Allyn Warren has the role of Uncle Ben Shapiro the pawnbroker and it is said that he presented the lovable old character of the song with touching effect. William Conklin appears as the bluff Patrolman Grady, with a hand as big as a ham and a heart as great as all outdoors.

The characterization of Victor McQuade, the youthful lover, is presented by Cullen Landis. A capable supporting cast aids the principals in a presentation of one of the most popular memories of bygone age. Frank R. Strayer, the director, according to advance notices from the New York showing, was careful to recall the customs and the costumes of the early 1900's, with the result that "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" as a picture, is said to bring back memories as readily as does the unforgettable melody which once was the song of Broadway.

The story of the song concerns the discovery of a waif on the pawnbroker's doorstep. Shapiro becomes her guardian, but Brady is a daily caller and the child comes into girlhood nourished by their love the scope of her whole life limited to the environs of Second avenue. How she meets the son of a wealthy family, wins his love and is humiliated and finally emerges victorious, combined to build not only a song that sent its wistful notes down thru the years, but a story that has never been quite forgotten. Owing to its tender appeal to the human heart "Shoulder Arms" has recently been reissued by Pathe, and local film fans will have another opportunity to view this class of mirth when it comes to the Met Monday.

HARTMAN THEATER.

In the Hartman theater, Columbus for an engagement of three nights and Saturday matinee beginning Thursday March 17, Charles Frohman will present Otis Skinner in the romantic comedy, "The Honor of the Family."

Mr. Skinner's roles of the swash-buckling Colonel Phillippe Bridau is the most picturesque creation among the many memorable characterizations that he has contributed to the theater. Oscar Skinner is one of the few actors now on the stage who are able by the surety of their artistry to give a fictitious character a reality and humanness that charm and also convince. And the reason is that Mr. Skinner in his apprentice years in the theater thoroly learned his business and upon this foundation has added an individual and totally personal quality of acting that has made some roles inevitably his alone. One of these roles is that of Colonel Phillippe Bridau. It is quite impossible to conceive any other actor in the English speaking theater giving to this part the same skillful and sweeping breadth of portraiture with which Otis Skinner has invested it. It is a thing of art and a thing of life.

"The Honor of the Family" originated in a story by Balzac and so bears upon it the magic of a master of fiction. From the Balzac story "Un Menage de Garcon," Emile Fabre made a play which he called "La-Rabouilleuse." This latter Paul Potter translated into English and re-named "The Honor of the Family."

The story of the play concerns an old miser who has become the victim of the machinations of schemers who are greedy for his wealth. When all seems propitious for the realization of their plans, the old man's nephew, Colonel Phillippe Bridau, Napoleonic veteran, dare-devil, and a bit of a ruffian, intervenes and there ensues a battle of wits in which the colonel proves the winner. The plotters are routed and Bridau saves "The Honor of the Family."

Mr. Skinner is supported by a splendid band of players. These include Jesse Royce Landis, Eugene Woodward, Julia Shaw, Robert Harrison, Courtney White, Harry Burkhardt, D. V. Deering, Edward Butler, William Clark, Albert Berg, William Granger and Wilson Reynolds.

Church in Secular Use

Being of no use for church purposes the crypt of a church on Gray's Inn road, London, was rented as a book store, then as a wine cellar and recently as a fruit store.

"EXPERT WITNESS"Bill Is Passed By the Lower House.

Columbus, March 12.—With only one vote to spare, the first of three "expert witness" bills introduced by Representative D. S. Ingalls, Cleveland, was passed by the House late Thursday and sent over to the Senate.

The measure permits the trial court in civil cases to appoint three "expert" witnesses, doctors, engineers or whatever may be required, to supplement any expert testimony that may be presented by the contesting parties.

Two measures still to be considered provide for appointment of "expert" witnesses by the court in criminal cases of any kind and in criminal cases in which the question of insanity is raised. All three measures are backed by the Ohio Bar Association, Ohio Medical Association and the Cleveland Bar Association.

"Purpose of these bills," Ingalls told the House, "is to correct a fundamental evil in our laws. Expert witnesses now testify for the side that employs and pays them. Such testimony should be impartial and unbiased, and would be if these witnesses received their pay from the court, instead of from interested parties."

Bill to raise the pay of grand and petit jurors from $3 a day to $4, sponsored by Representative T. E. Williams, Mercer county, passed by vote of 100 to 7. This measure also goes to the Senate for approval.

Resolution by Senator G. M. Kumler, Preble county, to memorialize Congress to reappointment membership in the National House of Representatives on the basis of the 1920 census, which would give Ohio two and possibly three more congressmen, was adopted by the House without an opposing vote. It had previously passed the Senate.

SCHOOLS CRITICIZEDThreaten To Hold Up Appropriation For Kent and Wilberforce.

Columbus, March 12.—Appropriations to Kent State Normal Schools at Kent and Wilberforce University, near Xenia, will be held up unless charges of irregularities are cleared up by school officials, R. D. Williamson, chairman of the finance committee of the Ohio House of Representatives, said Friday.

Williamson said officials of the schools had promised to have financial arrangements straightened out to the satisfaction of the Legislature within two weeks. Both institutions have been criticized during the last year by examiners in the office of State Auditor Tracy.

The state appropriation bill is not expected to be ready for action for several weeks.

Sailor's "Weather"

The seaman often speaks of "weather" when he has in mind nothing more than wind, says Nature Magazine. "Dirty weather" suggests to the landsman the idea of rain and mud, but in nautical parlance it means a blow.

FLAGELLANTES SURVIVE IN NORTHERN NEW MEXICOMembers of Fanatical Creed Torture Themselves as Part of Religious Ceremony.

Santa Fe, N. M.—Penitentes remain in the United States to this very day. Within the last month their activities have been repeatedly observed in northern New Mexico in the counties of Taos, Colfax, Rio Arriba, Mora, San Miguel, Sandoval, and Valencia.

This cult of flesh torturers, popularly supposed to have become extinct better than a century ago, believes heavenly bliss can be obtained by torturing the body. They are supposed to be a long removed survival of the Flagellantes, a sect organized in Italy in 1210 A. D.

In the sixteenth century the fanatical creed broke out again, and Pope Clement VI issued a papal bull against them March 25, 1574. From Spain and Portugal the sect was brought to Mexico and it has survived principally among the Indians and half breeds in these thinly settled counties of New Mexico.

There are three orders of penitentes. The first order are allowed to be present only at the sect churches, which are hidden well among the canyons and mountains. Those belonging to the second degree are allowed to hold office, and those of the third degree are obligated to practice self-punishment.

There are two principal methods of self-torture practiced today. The first is to cut a deep cross between the shoulders in which is placed a wooden bit and to the bit is tied a heavy wooden cross which the self-appointed victim drags about over the desert. By the other method they braid ropes of yucca, a long sprayed cactus, and strip themselves and flog one another to the rhythm of ritual chants. Women as well as men are allowed membership in the sect and participate equally in the self-torture.

Youngster's Frocks in Gay Hand-Embroidery

According to the foreword of the mode, this is to be a season of colorful hand-embroidery—a fact which pertains to the styling of little girls' clothes for spring and summer. In making wee daughter's wash dresses try combining cross-stitch and lazy-dazy stitch as shown in the picture. For voile, swiss or organdie frocks one can vary the work by drawing out threads and substituting fancy hemstitching done with colored thread, for the cross-stitch.

Georgettes, Crepes and Sports Silks Attractive

Dainty georgettes, crepes and sports silks are made up in many attractive styles and in many instances are self-trimmed, thereby requiring a touch of something different to give them individuality. This is where the dainty kid flowers come in, for many designers are posing them on either the right or left shoulder. They are soft and velvety looking, especially when of the gardenia family. The colors favored are the pastel shades of pink, maize, lavender, rose, beige and ivory.

Bedroom slippers in moccasin style with bright green suede soles are truly copied from those the little princesses wore in the "Arabian Nights." The upper part is of gold brocade fabric studded with small gold beads, and around the top is a soft warm band of white fur. To complete the idea of luxury, peach-colored satin is used for lining.

Parasols Necessary on Southern Resort Trip

One article not to be overlooked in taking a Southern trip is a parasol. In fact several may well be carried along. This season the models are short and stubby like those in fancy silks now being carried about by smartly dressed women in town. The fabrics are linen and raffia, either in plain or fancy woven effects. Of special interest are those that are plain with hand-embroidered borders, in floral designs that bring out the natural colorings of the flowers.

There is the widest range of handles, made of various compositions, wood, and leather. Both the wood and composition handles are equipped with silk cord loops and tassels, while the leather-covered ones have leather straps.

Elizabethan Frills in Winter Fashion Picture

The Elizabethan influence on modern English fashions is emphasized by pierrot frills on the new winter frocks. Short hair is believed responsible for the vogue for neck ornamentation. It is exemplified by high collars made of strings around the neck. The tulle bow has come in again on a gigantic scale. With light dresses a black velvet band is worn around the neck and is finished off at the side-back by an immense bow of tulle. The black band must fit closely around the neck in order to give the bow its full value, and fairly stiff tulle is used so that it may stick out as much as Queen Elizabeth's duff. With gray hair, gray tulle is used.

Large Envelope Bags of Embroidered Silk

Envelope bags of good proportion and made of rich silks embroidered in ecclesiastical themes serve to accentuate the feeling of ease and luxury that accompanies a very elaborate wardrobe. These bags follow the general color tones and styling of the very modern bags. In many of them the single color scheme is developed, especially in those of silver and gold. In this way such a bag may be carried with impunity with most any color scheme.

Jersey Jumpers

For the Southern sports costumes, jersey is becoming more and more popular. A straight navy blue coat is frequently worn over a white jersey frock. Unborn calfskins are used occasionally to trim these knitted costumes.

Keeping Switches Clear

Many a train delay in winter weather used to be due to snow and ice choking rail switches. Oil fires once were burned on the ground around important switches to keep ice melted out. Nowadays it is done by laying lengths of electric heaters between the ties so that switches can work in winter with as little interference as in summer.

ALFALFA REPLACING RED CLOVER

The long-believed idea that alfalfa could not be profitably used as a crop in a three-year rotation is disproven, states the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. Ten years experimental work show that alfalfa used as a one-season crop in a short rotation system produces a higher average return than does red clover or sweet clover, when grown in a three-year rotation, with corn and wheat on soils typical of a large portion of Indiana.

The average returns per year for the ten years 1916 to 1925 from each of these rotations were as follows:

Corn, wheat and red clover, $27.35 per year; corn, wheat and sweet clover, $27.81 per year; corn, wheat and alfalfa, $31.94 per acre.

While alfalfa led the other two rotations in this comparison, alfalfa in a long rotation made a still better showing. The average returns from a six-year rotation consisting of corn, corn, wheat, alfalfa, alfalfa, alfalfa averaged $38.86 per year. All hays were credited at $12 per ton, whereas the actual market value of alfalfa ran considerably higher than that.

Summing these results up, Professor Wiancko of Purdue University says:

"Considering the scarcity of clover seed, we are suggesting the mixing of some alfalfa with the clover seed or even using alfalfa entirely in the place of clover even for the one year hay crop in a short rotation, wherever conditions are favorable. Alfalfa may be satisfactorily used in that way if the land is not too acid, and if proper attention is given to the matter of inoculation. It must be remembered that special inoculation should be applied wherever alfalfa is to be grown for the first time."

June's Theory on Love

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

JUNE sat before the desk in her rather shabby little bedroom, pen in hand, a sheet of note paper spread before her. She intended to write to Rodney Mapes—but she found herself absently filling the sheet with the initials J. E. D., "Jim Edgerton Darrow, Jim Edgerton Darrow," she whispered to herself.

Yesterday had been her birthday and Rodney had sent there to the girls' boarding school, where she served as an instructor, a box of gorgeous red roses and a brief little note in which he had told her of this love and begged her to become his wife. Jim had let the day pass without even a note—yet June knew perfectly well that he had known it was her birthday. Obviously Rodney loved her—and just as obviously Jim didn't. During a wakeful night June had almost decided to write accepting Rodney's proposal—there was so much about him that she admired, so much that she almost loved. June tore up the note paper into fine scraps and threw them into her wastebasket.

It was late afternoon. She picked up an afternoon paper and idly began to scan its pages. There was a section of one page devoted to rather insane sort of advice to the lovers. Sleepily June began to read. There was an answer to a young woman obviously suffering from the pangs of unrequited love. "I am sorry to say," ran the advice, "that there is no way to make a young man fall in love if he is not disposed to do so. The best thing to do is to try to forget."

June didn't read the rest of the answer, but her sleepiness vanished, and in its place came a deep feeling of resentment toward the woman—or man—who wrote the advice. If course it was possible to make a man love you. June had read once that any girl, providing she was not positively repulsive, could win the love of any man who was not already in love. June firmly believed it. If the girl did not succeed it was because she did not use the right tactics. Take Jim and herself. Of course she could make Jim love her. The only trouble was that she had not gone about it in the right way. She had already tried to win Jim's love by making him jealous—by being cold and indifferent. She would now try the effect of making him think that she really did care for him. Without difficulty now she went to her desk and wrote a little note to Rodney, in which she told him as kindly as possible that while she was very fond of him, she did not want to marry him. She mailed it and then called Jim up at his office.

"Hello, Jim," she said archly. "You know yesterday was my birthday. Somebody sent me some lovely red roses, but didn't even send a card." She paused, almost terrified at her own boldness. Jim was making excuses. He had been very busy. He didn't think she cared about him, anyway. In fact, he had actually forgotten that it was her birthday. There was a note of flattered self-love in his voice that June did not exactly like, but this made it all the easier for her to go on. "Really, I was only teasing you," she said. "I didn't expect you to remember—only it's terribly dull here at the school, and if you should ask me to go to the movies tomorrow night I think I'd say yes."

The next afternoon came a box of orchids with Jim's card inclosed. On the back June read: "With sincere apologies for dear little June." There was a tone of conceit about it decidedly irritating to her.

The following Sunday afternoon Jim came for her in his car to take her motoring. Somewhere on a lonely country lane he stopped the car and drawing June to him kissed her, and only laughed rather triumphantly when she protested.

"Poor little June," he said when he had let her go and sat there stroking her hand. "I'd always liked you a lot. But, great Scott, I never thought you cared so much for me. You know I wouldn't do anything to make you unhappy. I don't know as it's a good plan to become actually engaged now—it might make trouble for you at the school. But suppose we have a sort of trial engagement. We'll play around together this winter—and in the spring, if you still care for me the way you do now—why, I'll get you the nicest engagement ring you ever hoped to have."

June did not show her resentment—did not even withdraw her hand. Instead she looked straight in his eyes—eyes that beamed with gratified conceit.

"Jim, dear, I hate to hurt your feelings. I've always liked you a lot. Only as you said a real engagement would be awkward."

Jim looked a trifle nonplussed. "Perhaps if I'd come right out with a proposal you'd have liked it better," he grinned.

"Perhaps," agreed June.

Back in the school June lost no time in telephoning to Rodney. She simply asked him to come to see her at the school as soon as he could, after supper. He was waiting for her in the dreary drawing-room when she came up from the drearier dining room. She sat beside him on the little divan in a corner of the room.

"Rodney, I made a mistake," she said. "Rodney, I really love you—but it took a little time for me to find it out."

Balked at Spelling of New Hubby's Name

An employee of the gas company tells me of a foreign bride who approached her the other day to have the gas in the new love nest turned on.

"I just get married—please turn on gas," was the way she put it.

"You want it in your husband's name?" the young woman behind the counter asked. The bride nodded.

"Then write his name on this line," the bride looked dumbly at her.

"Well, what is his name?" asked the other.

"Mike," the bride returned. "Mike Blankovitch"—an unspellable name—

"say, how you spell that name, missus?"

The puzzled young woman behind the counter smiled. "I'm sure I don't know," she said. "I should think you'd know, if you married him."

"Well," said the blushing bride, at length, "I go home and ask him how to spell that name, then I come back."

Express Agent's Troubles

The express agent at Freeport, Pa., sympathizes with his predecessor who had the trouble with the pigs, remarks the Boston Globe. A coon dog was ordered by a Freeport man on a fifteen-day free trial, and the express clerk was instructed that the money should not be sent to the breeder until the end of the trial period. By mistake the money was sent. The man decided that he didn't want the dog and the breeder decided that he wanted the money, so the agent became the dog's custodian. Then a few more yards of red tape were spun when the dog gave birth to thirteen puppies.

Uncomplimentary Fact

"It certainly isn't very flattering when you come to think about it," mused Smith. "Well, I'm no mind reader, but I'm willing to think about it. Spill it," said Brown. "Oh, I was just thinking how small it makes a husband feel to see how deadly afraid of a mouse his wife is and how deadly unafraid of him she is," replied Smith. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

Gingerbread Jerry

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

MR. JEREMIAH BORDEN had come out to Oakville with the avowed intention of spending a week's vacation in the old home where, as a boy, he had spent his summers. But Jeremiah, who was a very astute business man for his thirty years, had other things in mind.

The day of Jerry's arrival in Oakville he drove very slowly up from the village to the old Borden farm—much more slowly than was his custom. He wanted to get a good idea of the surrounding property. He had not revisited these scenes of his childhood for fifteen years, and he was prepared to find more changes than actually met his eyes. There the last thing before he reached his own territory was the broad, low-lying yellow house set amidst maple trees that belonged to the Pontiacs. Pleasant associations came to Jerry as he looked at the yellow house, and as he saw the curl of smoke rising from one of the many chimney pots he almost thought he could smell gingerbread.

There certainly was a strong association of gingerbread with that house. He remembered old Grandma Pontiac whom he had known so well when he was a boy running barefooted back and forth between the two houses. Grandma Pontiac always made gingerbread for him—every Wednesday and every Saturday all summer. She seemed to think that because he had reddish hair and freckles and his name was Jerry he ought to have more gingerbread than a boy like his brother who had dull brown hair, clear olive skin and was named Charles.

These thoughts of old Grandma Pontiac occupied Jerry's mind until he had passed well beyond the Pontiac property and neared his own driveway. If he undertook to open up his own tract of land as a suburban building tract the Pontiac property was bound to be benefited thereby. He would spend all the money for the boom and the Pontiacs, whoever they now were, would reap the benefits. That would not do. It was property that would eventually fetch a good price. But maybe the present Pontiacs or Pontiac did not know this. Possibly, too, they needed money. Jerry determined to visit them within the next few days and buy their property.

Not wishing to bother with any sort of a servant for the week of his visit Jerry had planned to take his three meals a day at the Oakville inn. But he was in a gloomy frame of mind when he returned to the old house after supper at the Oakville inn, which had been neither nourishing nor palatable.

Then it was that a rap came on the old door. Jerry went and there stood in the big old doorway the slender figure of a girl—a girl in white with rather wistful brown eyes—a pretty girl, too. She handed him a plate spread with white linen and fled.

"Here is some gingerbread for you," she said as she fled.

The very odor of that gingerbread seemed to brace Jerry, and as he sat down and munched the golden brown squares his mind seemed to turn back to years of his boyhood and he felt as if in truth the gingerbread had been a gift from old Grandma Pontiac, though he knew she had died six years before.

The girl had not said who she was, but Jerry felt convinced that she had come from the Pontiacs. He would carry back the empty dish and napkin that evening. That would at least give him an excuse for calling upon them.

The pretty girl in the white cotton frock met him at the old yellow house. Yes, she had brought him the gingerbread. . . . But she would have to explain. She asked him to sit down with her on the veranda while she did so. Old Grandma Pontiac had been very fond of her boy Jerry, as she called him, and when she died she had asked her to go on making gingerbread for Jerry. If he ever came back to Oakville she wanted him to have it twice a week. She left her recipe for the dainty and a small amount which was to be used for that purpose. The girl, who was named Nelly Pontiac, was the youngest of the grandchildren. The old Pontiac farm had been left between them all—three brothers and herself. They were away and she was trying to keep things going for them—getting men in by the day and making jams and preserves and things. But they would rather sell the place at almost any price.

"But you don't want to sell it at any price," Jerry heard himself telling her. "This property of yours is bound to come up in value. I'll tell you more about it later. Only take my advice. A few years from now you may be able to sell it at a very big profit. In the meantime if you want some money I'll be glad to lend it to you. An unscrupulous person might want to get the place away from you—but you are entitled to your profit."

This happened in June. In October Nelly Pontiac and Jerry were married in the little yellow house and went up the road to the white house on the hill for their honeymoon. And the wedding cake at that simple little wedding breakfast was gingerbread.

HAVE PICTURED ART OF ROYAL BURBANK

Alphonse Kann of France is sending a large collection of Egyptian, Greek, Roman and Persian art works to be sold by the American Art association. In the collection is a panel or slab from the throne room of an ancient Assyrian palace. It was unearthed in 1845, by Botta, the French consul at Mosul. This piece of sculpture shows a royal horticulturist making an effort to grow bigger and better fruit. It is a bas-relief and was made about the Seventh century B. C. The profile portrait on the stone is supposed to represent Assurbanipal, an Assyrian king, who ordered his brother burned and who boasted 80 women of royal birth among his servants. Students of Assyrian art say that the king in the picture is apparently developing dates artificially by dipping a palm spathe in a basket of pollen and rubbing it on the date flower.—Pathfinder Magazine.

THE EVACUATION OF SHANGHAI NEAR

DEFENDERS' LINES WEAKEN ENEMY GUN FIRE IS HEARD

In Soo Chow On the Grand Canal 57 Miles Northwest of the Capital of the Kiangsu Province—The Nationalist Army Is Forcing Its Liner Along Both Sides of Lake Taihu—Battle Ensuing Between the Cities of Pingwang and Wukiang on the Yantse Kiang River.

The Cantonese push northward, which is menacing the lines of communication of General Chang Tsung-Chang, Shantungese defender of Shanghai, was more pronounced Sunday.

The lull in military operations in Kiangsu Province was broken Sunday. The Cantonese, who are working their way forward along both lines of Lake Taihu, west of Shanghai, became involved in fighting on the shore of the lake between Pingwang and Wukiang. The sound of heavy gunfire could be heard in Soochow, on the Grand Canal 57 miles northwest of Shanghai.

Still another evidence of the Cantonese threat to the northeasterners' communications was given Saturday night. An armed band of 70 men removed several rails from a point on the Nanking-Shanghai railroad, only five miles from Shanghai.

A passenger train passing over the line was derailed but no one injured. General Chang Tsung-Chang's personal actions indicate that he is worried about his line of communications from Shanghai to his capital, Tsinaifu. He visited various points along the railroad to Tientsin and conferred with his generals in charge of guarding the line of communication.

The Cantonese or Nationalists, are continuing to advance down the Yangtze river toward Nanking, capital of Kiangsu Province and 200 miles west of Shanghai. They now are reported to be only 30 miles from Nanking, and remorse of its imminent fall have been circulated.

Missionary leaders seriously are considering withdrawing their workers from Nanking, in which city it is estimated there are 430 Americans.

Many Chinese refugees are arriving at Shanghai from Nanking and the neighboring city of Chinkiang.

The increasing threat to his communications is lending color to the reports circulated by Nationalist sympathizers that General Chang Tsung-Chang must evacuate Shanghai and withdraw northwestward to the Yangtze river, thereby admitting the impossibility of defending his long line of communications against the thrusts of the Nationalists.

Reports that several of General Chang Tsung-Chang's subordinate leaders may desert him also are circulated in Nationalist quarters.

Sunday's observance of the second anniversary of the death of Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, pioneer Chinese republican leaders did not bring the intense Nationalist drive to capture Shanghai which had been prophesied. The only fighting reported was in the region of Lake Taihu.

The most thoroly international spectacle since the Shanghai concentration was begun took place on the streets of the city Sunday when the Shanghai volunteer corps paraded, 1,700 strong.

The marchers included Americans, English, Scotch, Japanese, Italians, Portuguese, Filipinos, Chinese and Russians. The corps consists of resident foreigners in Shanghai and was organized to act in an emergency.

A feature of the parade was the presence of a recently recruited Russian company of 200 men, most of them veterans of the Czarist armies. It is believed that this company is the only mercenary body employed by any municipality in the world. It constitutes the only paid unit in the volunteer corps.

F. W. Linde, Soviet consul at Shanghai, returned from Nanking, after an unsuccessful attempt to release Mme. Borodin, wife of the Cantonese advisor and three Russian couriers, who were arrested by the Shantungese more than a week ago.

A state of virtual panic prevails among the Chinese shopkeepers of the native city of Shanghai, who are feeling the hand of the Shantung soldiery, whose tactics are believed to be doing much to swing native business men over to the Nationalist cause.

Chang Tsung-Chang's troops are said to be maintaining the evil reputation they have gained in other parts of the country. A dozen shops have been looted and many merchants are afraid to open their doors. Large sums of money are demanded at the point of the bayonet, while the native police are powerless to interfere.

AMBULANCE SERVICE.

Mrs. Louis Schneider of North Court street, was conveyed to her home Sunday in the Mader & Ebert invalid car from Grant hospital, Columbus, where she had been for the past nine weeks. Mrs. Schneider is making a slow recovery.

"HOW ABOUT BUDGET?"

When Director General of the Budget Lord made a visit to the Smithsonian Institution he was greatly surprised when, breaking into a conversation General Lord was conducting, a voice asked: "How about the budget?" Turning quickly, General Lord discovered it was an Indian Myna, a talking bird in the Smithsonian collection. The story is vouched for by other officials who were present. This photograph shows O. D. Wayland, assistant bird keeper of the national zoo, with the bird.

POLICE COURT.

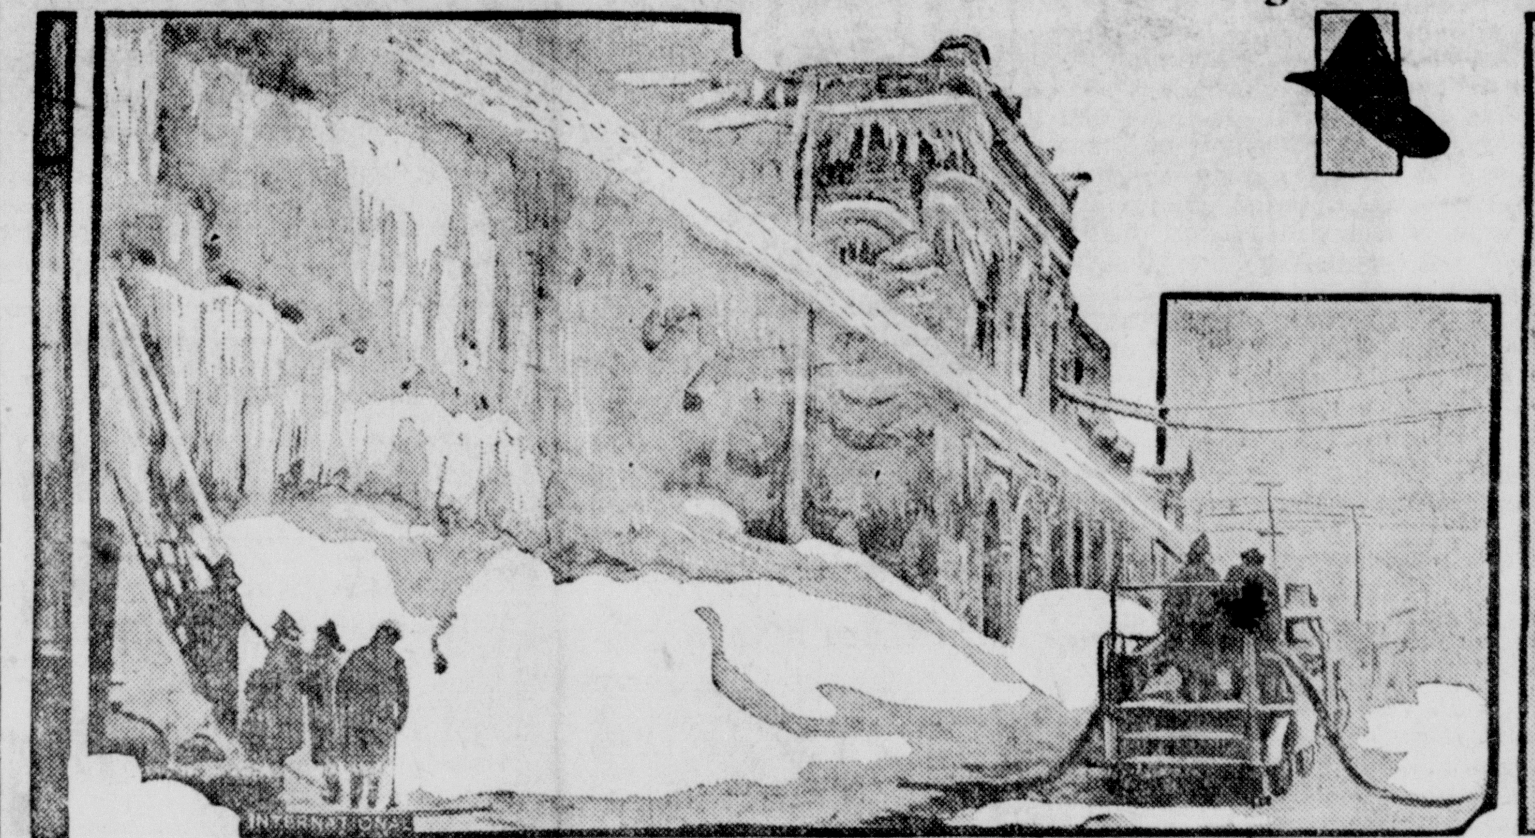

Frank Greer and William Briner, drunks, were brought in Saturday night. They were held over Sunday. In police court they were given fines of $10 which they paid and were released.

HAPPENINGS IN OUR STATE

Cleveland — A watchman was murdered and loot valued at $11,000 stolen today by safecrackers operating in three widely separated districts. Jasper Russell, 28, watchman at the Parish & Bingham division of the Midland Steel Products Co., was slain by safecrackers interrupted in the office of the plant.

Cincinnati — General Herbert M. Lord, Washington, director of the budget, will be welcomed here tomorrow by a committee headed by C. O. Sherrill, city manager, who five years was associated with Lord.

McArthur — The body of William Stout, wealthy farmer, found in a well at his son's home, will be taken to Carpenter, for burial, while Mrs. Inez Palmer, 24, common law wife of his son, Arthur, is held in jail, accused of the murder. The young woman will be arraigned this week on a first degree murder charge. The murdered man's son, Arthur, also is in jail charged with the murder last November of his stepmother, Mrs. Sarah Stout.

Akron — Bandits held up the watchman of an east end department store, blew the safe and obtained about $200 in cash Sunday. The watchman was grabbed by two men as he went outside the Hower company store. One of the bandits struck him over the head with a revolver and dragged him into the store.

After tying the watchman to a chair the burglars blew the safe and escaped.

C. D. CLOSSON ILL.

His illness started about one week ago with the grip, this developed into pleurisy and finally lobar pneumonia and leakage of the heart. Dr. Coons, of Columbus, a specialist in heart diseases, was called and gave Mr. Closson a thorax examination. While the patient has not shown any weakness today, he has not shown any improvement.

NET INCOME OF SCIOTO VALLEY POWER COMPANY

Increase in Freight Revenue,
But Loss in Receipts For
Passenger Service.

Net income of the Scioto Valley Railway and Power Co., for the year ended December 31, was $63,190, an increase of $17,629 over the previous year. After payment of income tax and dividends on first preferred stock there was carried to surplus $25,918, an increase of $10,545 over the surplus indicated at the end of 1925.

Frank A. Davis, president of the company, says in a statement to stockholders:

"The increase in freight revenue was $15,020 and the increase in power revenue was $24,910. The loss in passenger revenue was $2790 as against $51,760 in 1925 and $64,903 in 1924. The relatively small loss in 1926 as compared with the two preceding years might be taken as an indication that the company has approached the low point in its passenger revenue."

"EXPERT WITNESS"Bill Is Passed By the Lower House.

Columbus, March 12.—With only one vote to spare, the first of three "expert witness" bills introduced by Representative D. S. Ingalls, Cleveland, was passed by the House late Thursday and sent over to the Senate.

The measure permits the trial court in civil cases to appoint three "expert" witnesses, doctors, engineers or whatever may be required, to supplement any expert testimony that may be presented by the contesting parties.

Two measures still to be considered provide for appointment of "expert" witnesses by the court in criminal cases of any kind and in criminal cases in which the question of insanity is raised. All three measures are backed by the Ohio Bar Association, Ohio Medical Association and the Cleveland Bar Association.

"Purpose of these bills," Ingalls told the House, "is to correct a fundamental evil in our laws. Expert witnesses now testify for the side that employs and pays them. Such testimony should be impartial and unbiased, and would be if these witnesses received their pay from the court, instead of from interested parties."

Bill to raise the pay of grand and petit jurors from $3 a day to $4, sponsored by Representative T. E. Williams, Mercer county, passed by vote of 100 to 7. This measure also goes to the Senate for approval.

Resolution by Senator G. M. Kumler, Preble county, to memorialize Congress to reapportion membership in the National House of Representatives on the basis of the 1920 census, which would give Ohio two and possibly three more congressmen, was adopted by the House without an opposing vote. It had previously passed the Senate.

SCHOOLS CRITICIZEDThreaten To Hold Up Appropriation For Kent and Wilberforce.

Columbus, March 12.—Appropriations to Kent State Normal Schools at Kent and Wilberforce University, near Xenia, will be held up unless charges of irregularities are cleared up by school officials, R. D. Williamson, chairman of the finance committee of the Ohio House of Representatives, said Friday.

Williamson said officials of the schools had promised to have financial arrangements straightened out to the satisfaction of the Legislature within two weeks. Both institutions have been criticized during the last year by examiners in the office of State Auditor Tracy.

The state appropriation bill is not expected to be ready for action for several weeks.

Sailor's "Weather"

The seaman often speaks of "weather" when he has in mind nothing more than wind, says Nature Magazine. "Dirty weather" suggests to the landsman the idea of rain and mud, but in nautical parlance it means a blow.

FLAGELLANTES SURVIVE IN NORTHERN NEW MEXICO

Members of Fanatical Creed Torture Themselves as Part of Religious Ceremony.

Santa Fe, N. M.—Penitentes remain in the United States to this very day. Within the last month their activities have been repeatedly observed in northern New Mexico in the counties of Taos, Colfax, Rio Arriba, Mora, San Miguel, Sandoval, and Valencia.

This cult of flesh torturers, popularly supposed to have become extinct better than a century ago, believes heavenly bliss can be obtained by torturing the body. They are supposed to be a long removed survival of the Flagellantes, a sect organized in Italy in 1210 A. D.

In the Sixteenth century the fanatical creed broke out again, and Pope Clement VI issued a papal bull against them March 25, 1574. From Spain and Portugal the sect was brought to Mexico and it has survived principally among the Indians and half breeds in these thinly settled counties of New Mexico.

There are three orders of penitentes. The first order are allowed to be present only at the sect churches, which are hidden well among the canyons and mountains. Those belonging to the second degree are allowed to hold office, and those of the third degree are obligated to practice self-punishment.

There are two principal methods of self-torture practiced today. The first is to cut a deep cross between the shoulders in which is placed a wooden bit and to the bit is tied a heavy wooden cross which the self-appointed victim drags about over the desert. By the other method they braid ropes of yucca, a long sprayed cactus, and strip themselves and flog one another to the rhythm of ritual chants. Women as well as men are allowed membership in the sect and participate equally in the self-torture.

Youngster's Frocks in Gay Hand-Embroidery

According to the foreword of the mode, this is to be a season of colorful hand-embroidery—a fact which pertains to the styling of little girls' clothes for spring and summer. In making wee daughter's wash dresses try combining cross-stitch and lazy-dazy stitch as shown in the picture. For voile, swiss or organdie frocks one can vary the work by drawing out threads and substituting fancy hemstitching done with colored thread, for the cross-stitch.

Georgettes, Crepes and Sports Silks Attractive

Dainty georgettes, crepes and sports silks are made up in many attractive styles and in many instances are self-trimmed, thereby requiring a touch of something different to give them individuality. This is where the dainty kid flowers come in, for many designers are posing them on either the right or left shoulder. They are soft and velvety looking, especially when of the gardenia family. The colors favored are the pastel shades of pink, maize, lavender, rose, beige and ivory.

Bedroom slippers in moccasin style with bright green suede soles are truly copied from those the little princesses wore in the "Arabian Nights." The upper part is of gold brocade fabric studded with small gold beads, and around the top is a soft warm band of white fur. To complete the idea of luxury, peach-colored satin is used for lining.

Parasols Necessary on Southern Resort Trip

One article not to be overlooked in taking a Southern trip is a parasol. In fact several may well be carried along. This season the models are short and stubby like those in fancy silks now being carried about by smartly dressed women in town. The fabrics are linen and raffia, either in plain or fancy woven effects. Of special interest are those that are plain with hand-embroidered borders, in floral designs that bring out the natural colorings of the flowers.

There is the widest range of handles, made of various compositions, wood, and leather. Both the wood and composition handles are equipped with silk cord loops and tassels, while the leather-covered ones have leather straps.

Elizabethan Frills in Winter Fashion Picture

The Elizabethan influence on modern English fashions is emphasized by pierrot frills on the new winter frocks. Short hair is believed responsible for the vogue for neck ornamentation. It is exemplified by high collars made of strings around the neck. The tulle bow has come in again on a gigantic scale. With light dresses a black velvet band is worn around the neck and is finished off at the side-back by an immense bow of tulle. The black band must fit closely around the neck in order to give the bow its full value, and fairly stiff tulle is used so that it may stick out as much as Queen Elizabeth's duff. With gray hair, gray tulle is used.

Large Envelope Bags of Embroidered Silk

Envelope bags of good proportion and made of rich silks embroidered in ecclesiastical themes serve to accentuate the feeling of ease and luxury that accompanies a very elaborate wardrobe. These bags follow the general color tones and styling of the very modern bags. In many of them the single color scheme is developed, especially in those of silver and gold. In this way such a bag may be carried with impunity with most any color scheme.

Jersey Jumpers

For the Southern sports costumes, jersey is becoming more and more popular. A straight navy blue coat is frequently worn over a white jersey frock. Unborn calfskins are used occasionally to trim these knitted costumes.

Keeping Switches Clear

Many a train delay in winter weather used to be due to snow and ice choking rail switches. Oil fires once were burned on the ground around important switches to keep ice melted out. Nowadays it is done by laying lengths of electric heaters between the ties so that switches can work in winter with as little interference as in summer.

Balked at Spelling of New Hubby's Name

An employee of the gas company tells me of a foreign bride who approached her the other day to have the gas in the new love nest turned on. "I just get married—please turn on gas," was the way she put it. "You want it in your husband's name?" the young woman behind the counter asked. The bride nodded. "Then write his name on this line." The bride looked dumbly at her. "Well, what is his name?" asked the other.

"Mike," the bride returned. "Mike Blankovitch—" an unspellable name—"say, how you spell that name, missus?"

The puzzled young woman behind the counter smiled. "I'm sure I don't know," she said. "I should think you'd know, if you married him."

"Well," said the blushing bride, at length, "I go home and ask him how to spell that name, then I come back." —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Express Agent's Troubles

The express agent at Freeport, Pa., sympathizes with his predecessor who had the trouble with the pigs, remarks the Boston Globe. A coon dog was ordered by a Freeport man on a fifteen-day free trial, and the express clerk was instructed that the money should not be sent to the breeder until the end of the trial period. By mistake the money was sent. The man decided that he didn't want the dog and the breeder decided that he wanted the money, so the agent became the dog's custodian. Then a few more yards of red tape were spun when the dog gave birth to thirteen puppies.

Uncomplimentary Fact

"It certainly isn't very flattering when you come to think about it," mused Smith. "Well, I'm no mind reader, but I'm willing to think about it. Spill it," said Brown. "Oh, I was just thinking how small it makes a husband feel to see how deadly afraid of a mouse his wife is and how deadly unafraid of him she is," replied Smith. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

Gingerbread Jerry

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

MR. JEREMIAH BORDEN had come out to Oakville with the avowed intention of spending a week's vacation in the old home where, as a boy, he had spent his summers. But Jeremiah, who was a very astute business man for his thirty years, had other things in mind.

The day of Jerry's arrival in Oakville he drove very slowly up from the village to the old Borden farm—much more slowly than was his custom. He wanted to get a good idea of the surrounding property. He had not revisited these scenes of his childhood for fifteen years, and he was prepared to find more changes than actually met his eyes. There the last thing before he reached his own territory was the broad, low-lying yellow house set amidst maple trees that belonged to the Pontiacs. Pleasant associations came to Jerry as he looked at the yellow house, and as he saw the curl of smoke rising from one of the many chimney pots he almost thought he could smell gingerbread.

There certainly was a strong association of gingerbread with that house. He remembered old Grandma Pontiac whom he had known so well when he was a boy running barefooted back and forth between the two houses. Grandma Pontiac always made gingerbread for him—every Wednesday and every Saturday all summer. She seemed to think that because he had reddish hair and freckles and his name was Jerry he ought to have more gingerbread than a boy like his brother who had dull brown hair, clear olive skin and was named Charles.

These thoughts of old Grandma Pontiac occupied Jerry's mind until he had passed well beyond the Pontiac property and neared his own driveway. If he undertook to open up his own tract of land as a suburban building tract the Pontiac property was bound to be benefited thereby. He would spend all the money for the boom and the Pontiacs, whoever they now were, would reap the benefits. That would not do. It was property that would eventually fetch a good price. But maybe the present Pontiacs or Pontiac did not know this. Possibly, too, they needed money. Jerry determined to visit them within the next few days and buy their property.

Not wishing to bother with any sort of a servant for the week of his visit Jerry had planned to take his three meals a day at the Oakville inn. But he was in a gloomy frame of mind when he returned to the old house after supper at the Oakville inn, which had been neither nourishing nor palatable.

Then it was that a rap came on the old door. Jerry went and there stood in the big old doorway the slender figure of a girl—a girl in white with rather wistful brown eyes—a pretty girl, too. She handed him a plate spread with white linen and fled.

"Here is some gingerbread for you," she said as she fled.

The very odor of that gingerbread seemed to brace Jerry, and as he sat down and munched the golden brown squares his mind seemed to turn back to years of his boyhood and he felt as if in truth the gingerbread had been a gift from old Grandma Pontiac, though he knew she had died six years before.

The girl had not said who she was, but Jerry felt convinced that she had come from the Pontiacs. He would carry back the empty dish and napkin that evening. That would at least give him an excuse for calling upon them.

The pretty girl in the white cotton frock met him at the old yellow house. Yes, she had brought him the gingerbread . . . but she would have to explain. She asked him to sit down with her on the veranda while she did so. Old Grandma Pontiac had been very fond of her boy Jerry, as she called him, and when she died she had asked her to go on making gingerbread for Jerry. If he ever came back to Oakville she wanted him to have it twice a week. She left her recipe for the dainty and a small amount which was to be used for that purpose. The girl, who was named Nelly Pontiac, was the youngest of the grandchildren. The old Pontiac farm had been left between them all—three brothers and herself. They were away and she was trying to keep things going for them—getting men in by the day and making jams and preserves and things. But they would rather sell the place at almost any price.

"But you don't want to sell it at any price," Jerry heard himself telling her. "This property of yours is bound to come up in value. I'll tell you more about it later. Only take my advice. A few years from now you may be able to sell it at a very big profit. In the meantime if you want some money I'll be glad to lend it to you. An unscrupulous person might want to get the place away from you—but you are entitled to your profit."

This happened in June. In October Nelly Pontiac and Jerry were married in the little yellow house and went up the road to the white house on the hill for their honeymoon. And the wedding cake at that simple little wedding breakfast was gingerbread.

HAVE PICTURED ART OF ROYAL BURBANK

Alphonse Kann of France is sending a large collection of Egyptian, Greek, Roman and Persian art works to be sold by the American Art association. In the collection is a panel or slab from the throne room of an ancient Assyrian palace. It was unearthed in 1845, by Botta, the French consul at Mosul. This piece of sculpture shows a royal horticulturist making an effort to grow bigger and better fruit. It is a bas-relief and was made about the Seventh century B.C. The profile portrait on the stone is supposed to represent Assurbanipal, an Assyrian king, who ordered his brother burned and who boasted 80 women of royal birth among his servants. Students of Assyrian art say that the king in the picture is apparently developing dates artificially by dipping a palm spathe in a basket of pollen and rubbing it on the date flower. —Pathfinder Magazine.
